Key Points:

1. In the 2014-15 Budget, the Government announced the abolition of the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner (OAIC) from 1 January 2015. The enabling Bill, the Freedom of Information Amendment (New Arrangements) Bill 2014 (the Bill) has not yet passed the Senate, so the OAIC continues to operate (but in a significantly reduced way). s47C; s47E(d)
s47C; s47E(d)
2. The Budget measure agreed that the OAIC's FOI functions would be undertaken by other agencies and that the OAIC's Privacy Commissioner role and privacy functions would continue but move from the OAIC to the Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC) (briefing B14/2786 refers). This is to be effected by the Bill.

7. In considering the Bill, the Senate has questioned what the Government's approach to the Hawke review is.

Key Points:

2. In the 2014-15 Budget, the Government announced (as part of its smaller government agenda) the abolition of the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner (OAIC) from 1 January 2015. This would also have reduced the number of reviews available in relation to FOI requests by removing the ability for reviews to be made to the OAIC.
3. As the Bill has not come into effect the OAIC continues to operate.
 - a. The OAIC's funding was adjusted in the 2014-15 Budget to reflect that from 1 January 2015 it would no longer exist and its functions would be transferred. It is currently operating on financial reserves and has reduced its staff and activities, particularly its review of FOI decisions, to reduce expenditure.
 - b. Had the Bill passed, merits review of FOI decisions by the OAIC would no longer be possible. Internal agency reviews would still be available, appeals could still be made the Administrative Appeals Tribunal and complaints about how an agency managed an FOI request could be considered by the Commonwealth Ombudsman. The OAIC's FOI guidance functions would be carried out by the Attorney-General's Department (AGD). It was also proposed that the OAIC's privacy functions (including support for the Privacy Commissioner and handling public and private sector privacy complaints) would continue but move from the OAIC to the Australian Human Right Commission (AHRC).
